John 20: 11-18

The Shortest Sermon

Really this sermon should be titled The Shortest Sermon and a Story.

The shortest sermon is found at the very end of our reading for today: "We have see the Lord!" This would be a "Drop the mic moment" if it weren't attached to my head.

We have seen the Lord...Jesus — really him — scars and all!

But what about us? We don't get to see Jesus like they did. We do get "resurrections," but of a different sort.

Which brings me to our story for today, which is told by Paul Villard... (which I discovered through the UCC church in Port Richey, FL, where Helen and Howard Misselhorn went, which is now being served by a pastor friend of mine from here!)

The story:

When I was quite young, my family had one of the first telephones in our neighborhood. I remember well the polished oak case fastened to the wall on the lower stair landing. The shiny receiver hung on the side of the box. I even remembered the number — 105. I was too little to reach the telephone, but used to listen with fascination when my mother talked into it.

Once she lifted me up to speak to my father who was away on business. Magic! Then I discovered that somewhere inside that wonderful device lived an amazing person — her name was "Information please" and there was nothing that she did not know. My mother could ask her for anybody's number, and when our clock ran down, Information Please immediately supplied the correct time.

My first personal experience with this "genie-in-the-receiver" came one day while my mother was visiting a neighbor. Amusing myself at the tool bench in the basement, I whacked my finger with a hammer. The pain was terrible, but there didn't seem to be much use crying because there was no one home to offer sympathy. I walked around the house sucking my throbbing finger, finally arriving at the stairway. The telephone!

Quickly, I ran for the footstool in the parlor and dragged it to the landing. Climbing up, I unhooked the receiver and held it to my ear. "Information Please," I said into the mouthpiece just above my head. A click or two, and a small clear voice spoke into my ear. "Information."
"I hurt my fingerrrr..." I wailed into the phone.

The tears came readily enough now that I had an audience. "Isn't your mother home?"

"Nobody's home but me," I blubbered.

"Are you bleeding?"

"No. I hit it with the hammer and it hurts."

"Can you open your icebox?" She asked. I said I could.

"Then chip off a little piece of ice and hold it on your finger. That will stop the hurt. But be careful when you use the ice pick," she admonished. "And don't cry, you'll be alright."

After that, I called “Information Please” for everything. I asked for help with my Geography and she told me where Philadelphia was, and the Orinoco — the romantic river I was going to explore when I grew up. She helped me with my Arithmetic, and she told me that a pet chipmunk — I’d caught him in the park just the day before — would eat fruits and nuts. And there was the time that Pete, our pet canary died.

I called Information Please and told her the whole sad story. She listened, then she said the usual things grown-ups say to soothe a child. But I was inconsolable. Why was it that birds should sing so beautifully and bring joy to whole families, only to end as a heap of feather, feet up, on the bottom of a cage?

She must have sensed my deep concern, for she quietly said, “Paul, always remember that there are other worlds to sing in.” Somehow, I felt better.

Another day, I was at the telephone. “Information,” said the now familiar voice.

“How do you spell fix?”

“F-I-X.” At that instant my sister, who took unholy joy in scaring me, jumped off the stairs at me with a banshee shriek, “Yaaaaaaaaaaaaa!” I fell off the stool, pulling the receiver out of the box by its roots. We were both terrified — Information Please was no longer there, and I was not at all sure that I hadn’t hurt her when I pulled the receiver out.

Minutes later, there was a man on the porch. “I’m a telephone repairman. I was working down the street and the operator said that there might be some trouble at this number.” He reached for the receiver in my hand. “What happened?” I told him. “Well, we can fix that in a minute or two.”

He opened the telephone box exposing a maze of wires and coils, and fiddled for a while with the end of the receiver cord, tightened things with a small screwdriver. He jiggled the hook up and down a few times, then he spoke into the phone. “Hi, this is Pete. Everything’s under control at 105. The kid’s sister scared him and he pulled the cord out of the box.”

He hung up, smiled, gave me a pat on the head and walked out the door.

All this took place in a small town in the Pacific Northwest. Then, when I was nine years old, we moved across the country to Boston — and I missed my mentor terribly. Information Please belonged in that old wooden box back at home, and I somehow never thought of trying the tall, skinny new phone that sat on the small table in the hall in our new house.

Yet, as I grew into my teens, the memories of those childhood conversations never really left me; often in moments of doubt and perplexity I would recall the serene sense of security I had when I knew that I could call Information Please and get the right answer. I appreciated now how very patient, understanding and kind she was to have wasted her time on a little boy.

A few years later, on my way back to college, my plane put down in Seattle. I had about half an hour between plane connections, and I spent 15 minutes or so on the phone with my sister who lived there now, happily mellowed by marriage and motherhood. Then, really without thinking what I was doing, I dialed my hometown operator and said, “Information Please.”

Miraculously, I heard again the small, clear voice that I knew so well: “Information.” I hadn’t planned this, but I heard myself saying, “Could you tell me, please, how to spell the word ‘fix’?” There was a long pause. Then came the softly spoken answer. “I guess,” said Information Please, “that your finger must have healed by now.” I laughed.

“So it’s really still you. I wonder if you have any idea how much you meant to me during all that time...”

“I wonder,” she replied, “if you know how much you meant to me? I never had any children, and I used to look forward to your calls. Silly, wasn’t it?”

It didn't seem silly, but I didn't say so. Instead I told her how often I had thought of her over the years, and I asked if I could call her again when I came back to visit my sister when the semester was over. "Please do. Just ask for Sally."

"Goodbye Sally." It sounded strange for Information Please to have a name. "If I run into any chipmunks, I'll tell them to eat fruits and nuts."

"Do that," she said. "And I expect one of these days you'll be off for the Orinoco. Well, goodbye."

Just three months later, I was back again at the Seattle airport. A different voice answered, "Information," and I asked for Sally. "Are you a friend?"

"Yes" I said, "an old friend."

"Then I'm sorry to have to tell you. Sally had only been working part-time in the last few years because she was ill. She died five weeks ago."

But before I could hang up, she said, "Wait a minute. Did you say your name was Paul?"

"Yes."

"Well, Sally left a message for you. She wrote it down."

"What was it?" I asked, almost knowing in advance what it would be.

"Here it is, I'll read it - 'Tell him I still say there are other worlds to sing in. He'll know what I mean.'"

I thanked her and I hung up. I did know what Sally meant.

Even in the death of his friend, Paul experienced a resurrection of sorts...A raising up.

God will do that.

Watch for it.

Watch for Him.

Amen.
